PARTNERSHIPS

Most funders “spend way too much time developing their intellectual capital and trying to be thought leaders. Philanthropy should step back and let the community be thought leaders.”

“Funders should see us as partners in a common mission... we help them access a level of society they cannot reach by themselves.”

PANORAMA GLOBAL

“Funders often push for immediate, measurable results, but sometimes change takes years to occur and the result doesn’t manifest immediately.”

Funders ask them to do work with “less time, people, and overhead than they would want for the same work.”

“Instead of micromanaging our tactics, funders should trust in our tenacity and talent to get the work done.”
